

The black market

Allowing everyone to buy a weapon in a convenience store will increase smuggling. People will look for the lowest prices for a gun and there are chances they go to the black market. To ensure each person owns a gun, it will be necessary to increase the firearms production. By doing that, smugglers will be more easily able to have guns to sell. When we produce more, the prices are lower. The smugglers will be able to buy firearms for a very low price and sell them. For that reason, the prices of them will decrease drastically and it could be bad for the economy. The government will lose control of all the gun selling. The smugglers will control it. In addition, other products can be bought at the black market. So, by buying their guns on the black market, some people may be more and more incited to buy other smuggled products. If that happens, it can be really dangerous for all the economy. All the money would go in the hands of criminals. Those person are not as able as a good government to manage all the money and ensure the rights of the people. The money would be used for personal reasons. More and more people would start to own money by selling things like guns on the black market. All that will create a civilization based on the criminality. Of course, the objective of allowing everyone to have a gun is not to increase the black market. That's why it would be important to think about it, to analyze the consequences of the measure before we put it into application.
